invite you to:

Burma and the Media: Amplifying Voices for Democracy

Thursday, September 16, 2010
Film Debut and Panel Discussion 7:00-8:30 p.m.
The Paley Center for Media, 25 W 52 Street, NYC

Panelists:

Jody Williams, Nobel Peace Laureate (1997)
Lway Aye Nang, Women's League of Burma
Annie Sundberg, Producer & Director, Burma Soldier
Khin May Zaw, Radio Free Asia
Moderator Pat Mitchell, President & CEO, The Paley Center for Media

And Nobel Peace Laureates Shirin Ebadi (2003), and Mairead Maguire (1976)
introducing the film, This is My Witness.

The evening will include the premiere of THIS IS MY WITNESS: WOMEN OF BURMA BREAK THE SILENCE, a short documentary on the recent International Tribunal on Crimes Against Women of Burma. This unprecedented event was held last year in New York, and was witnessed by people around the globe on the Internet.

Following the screening, Pat Mitchell and panel members will discuss how global and social media are fueling the democracy movement of Burma. The people of Burma suffer daily at the hands of the ruling military junta. The regime's violent abuse of its own people—ranging from the imprisonment and torture of political dissenters to the systematic sexual violence and rape of women—puts it in the ranks of some of the world's worst human rights abusers. But, as the list of human rights abuses grows, so do the calls from within Burma for peace, justice and democracy. These calls are building international momentum, as global and social media bring the previously untold and unheard stories of Burma to the world.

Tickets: $10 Members of The Paley Centre for Media
